Conclusion

The Impact of Political Interference on Judicial Independence

Judicial independence in a state leads to individual independence. One who constraints judiciary independence overarches the constraints of individual rights. In a democratic state, the independence of judiciary is not an alienation. It is pivotal feature of a democratic state. It is because the significant role of check and balance on individuals - specifically on executive and legislative - sustains the alignment of a state with its constitution. However, the infliction of political interference on judicial decisions dissipates the sole purpose of judiciary in a state. The political interference on judicial independence hinders and undermines the authority of judiciary, leading to certain disruption in functions of a state. To
