The ESSAY :-

"In recent times, the very foundation of democracy - judicial Independence - is being tested. Political Interference has crept into the Judicial system, posing a serious threat to the impartiality and integrity of the courts. When those entrusted with upholding the rule of law face pressure from political powers, the rule of law itself stand at risk. This undermines the essence of justice, turning it from an unbiased guardian of rights into a tool of political manipulation."

Judicial Independence refers to the principle that Judges should be free from external influence, particularly from the executive and legislative Branches of the government, to ensure impartiality in their rulings. This independence is a cornerstone of democratic governance, as it enables the judiciary to act as an unbiased arbiter in legal disputes, upholding justice and constitutional norms.

Judicial Independence is vital for upholding the rule of law, ensuring that laws are applied equally to all individuals, regardless of their status and political affiliations. It allows the judiciary to serve as a check on the powers of legislative and executive, preventing abuse of power and ensuring that government actions are consistent with the constitution. Without an independent judiciary, the legal systems becomes subject to the manipulation, eroding public interest and trust and undermining democratic processes.

Political Interference significantly undermines judicial independence by compromising the integrity of the legal system, eroding public trust, and weakening democratic institutions. Such interference leads to biased rulings, delays in justice, and a diminished capacity of the judiciary to act as an independent check on government power.

Political Interference in the Judiciary is a widespread issue that has affected many democracies worldwide. In countries like Hungary, Turkey, and Venezuela, the erosion of judicial independence has been a key feature of authoritarian regimes. In Hungary, for instance, political control over judicial appointments has led to a weakened judiciary that cannot challenge government actions. Similarly, in Turkey, the purging of judges after the 2016 coup attempt exemplifies how political interference can drastically diminish judicial autonomy. In Pakistan, Political Interference in the Judiciary has a long history, especially during periods of military rule. During the 1980s, General Zia-ul-Haq's military regime politicized the judiciary by appointing judges who abided with his political interests.

The dismissal of Chief Justice Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudry in 2007 by General Pervez Musharraf marked a turning point, as it led to widespread protests and the Lawyer's Movement, which ultimately restored judicial independence.

Pakistani's military regimes have played a central role in undermining judicial independence. Under General Zia-ul-Haq, the judiciary was instrumentalized to legitimize the military rule, with judges who were appointed for their loyalty rather than their legal expertise. Similarly, during General Musharraf's rule, the military interference in judicial affairs reached new heights, culminating in the 2007 judicial crisis that led to the reinstatement of an independent judiciary.

One of the key causes of political interference in the judiciary is the lack of robust institutional framework that guarantees judicial independence. In Pakistan, the judicial system is susceptible to the political influence due to weak safeguards against external interference. The absence of clear constitutional mechanisms to ensure the independence of judges allows political parties and governments to exert undue influence on the judiciary.

Control over the judicial appointments, the appointment process for judges in Pakistan is highly politicized. The executive branch, particularly the President and the Prime Minister, wields significant control over the judicial appointments, often leading to the selection of judges who are politically aligned with the ruling government. This process has resulted in a judiciary that may not always act independently, as judges appointed through political connections may feel beholden to those who appointed them.

Political elites and parties frequently exert pressure on judges to rule in their favour, especially in high profile cases involving corruption or political disputes. In some instances, judges face threats or bribes to sway their decisions. This creates a corrupt system in which judicial rulings are influenced by political considerations rather than legal merit.

The media

also plays a significant role in shaping public opinion and exerting pressure on the judiciary. In Pakistan, Media outlets often align themselves with political factions, and their coverage of judicial proceedings can create public pressure on judges.

Politicians use the media to influence public perception and push for specific judicial outcomes, further undermining the independence of the judiciary.

Political interference in judicial decisions is evident in many high-profile cases in Pakistan. For example, in the Panama Papers case, former Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif was implicated in corruption, but his political supporters argued that judiciary was biased in its handling of the case. Similarly, in the case of Imran Khan's Political career, accusations of political influence on decisions of judiciary, regarding his eligibility to contest elections and the disqualification of opposition members have raised concerns about the judiciary impartiality.

Judicial Appointments in Pakistan are often influenced by political considerations, leading to the selection of judges who may be sympathetic to the ruling government. The 2007 dismissals of Chief Justice Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudry by General Musharraf and the subsequent reinstatement of the judiciary by the Lawyer's Movement is a prime example of political interference in judicial appointments and dismissals. Such instances have eroded public confidence in the independence of judiciary.

When judges are appointed based on political loyalty, the integrity of legal precedents is compromised.

Judicial decisions become inconsistent, as judges may prioritize political interests over the application of established legal principles. This inconsistency undermines the credibility of the legal system and weakens the rule of law.

The public's perception of the judiciary's independence is crucial for the rule of law. When political interference becomes apparent, public trust in the judiciary erodes, leading to a lack of confidence in the legal system. This, in turn, diminishes its ability to deliver justice and uphold the constitution.

Political Interference undermines the rule of law by making legal outcomes dependent on political considerations rather than merit.

Selective justice becomes the norm, where certain individuals and the political parties receive favorable rulings, while others are subject to unfair treatment. This creates a system of legal inequality, where the law is not applied equally to all the citizens.

The judiciary plays a critical role in upholding democratic principles by serving as a check on executive and legislative power. When the judiciary is politically compromised, it loses its ability to check the excesses of the government. This weakens democratic institutions and allows for the consolidation of power in the hands of ruling and executive party. Political Interference often leads to delays in legal proceedings, as judges may be reluctant to make decisions that could upset the political status quo. This delay in justice not only prolongs legal battles but also undermines the right of citizens to a timely and a fair trial. In some cases, political pressure leads to unjust rulings that favor political elites over the common person.

Political interference in the judiciary can have a detrimental impact on a country's international reputation. For Pakistan, allegations of political interference in judicial matters have undermined its standing in the international community. This affects foreign investments, diplomatic relations, and the perception of Pakistan as a country that upholds democratic values and the rule of law.

The Lawyer's Movement was a key turning point in the struggle for judicial independence in Pakistan since 2007 - 2009. The movement arose after General Musharraf's decision to dismiss Chief Justice Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudry in 2007. Lawyers, civil society activists, and political leaders united to restore the independence of judiciary, leading to the eventual reinstatement of Chief Justice Chaudry. The movement highlighted the critical role of an independent judiciary in maintaining the balance of power.

Imran Khan, the former Prime Minister of Pakistan has had several legal battles that involved allegations of judicial bias and political influence. In the 2018 elections general, his opposition parties accused the judiciary of favoring him in election-related cases. Similarly, after his ouster in 2022, the judiciary's handling of the cases involving him and his political parties raised questions about impartiality.

The Panama Papers Case, which implicated former Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif in corruption, sparked a political and legal controversy that questioned the neutrality of the judiciary. While the case was seen by some as a necessary step in holding politicians accountable, it was politically motivated.

Recent controversies, such as the judicial handling of the cases involving military influence and political figures, continue to highlight the issue of political interference in Pakistan's judiciary. These cases raise concern about the judiciary's ability to remain independent in the face of political pressure.

Judicial Reforms ~~sachak~~ - strengthen judicial independence, reforms are necessary to ensure that judicial appointments are made based on merit rather than political considerations. A transparent and independent judiciary commission should oversee the appointment process to prevent political influence.

A robust institutional framework that protects the independence of the judiciary is essential. Constitutional amendments that limit the executive's control over judicial appointments and create mechanisms for judicial accountability could help safeguard judicial autonomy. Acc to Article 175-191.

Greater Public Accountability is necessary to ensure that the judiciary remains independent. Civil society, along with an independent media, must play a significant role in monitoring judicial actions and holding judges accountable for their decisions). Public Trust in the judiciary can be restored through open-hearings, transparent decision-making processes, regular reports on judicial performance.

The principle of the Separation of powers, enshrined in the constitution, must be reinforced to prevent political encroachment on the judiciary, legislative and executive branches should operate independently, with strict boundaries that safeguard each branch's autonomy. In Pakistan, ensuring that the executive cannot influence judicial appointments and that the judiciary can function without interference from the government is crucial for maintaining balance of power.

International organizations, including the United Nations, the European Union, and the Commonwealth, can play a vital role in promoting judicial independence by exerting diplomatic pressure on governments that interfere with the judiciary. Financial and technical support for judicial reforms can also help strengthen the judiciary's independence. Moreover, Pakistan can learn from countries that have successfully safeguarded judicial autonomy through international cooperation and legal reforms.

It is concluded that we have explored how political interference undermines judicial independence of Pakistan, particularly through the manipulation of judicial appointments, biased rulings, and the politicization of the Judiciary. We have examined the historical context of political interference in Pakistan, provided examples from various political eras, and discussed the consequences of compromising judicial independence. From the Lawyer Movement, to recent judicial controversies involving political figures, it is evident that political interference has a detrimental impact on the Judiciary's impartiality. Judicial Independence is crucial for the protection of democratic principles, the rule of Law, and the fair application of justice. An Independent judiciary ensures that all individuals, regardless of their political or social status, are subject to the same legal standards. The judiciary must remain free from political influence to uphold the integrity of the legal system and protect fundamental rights. To address the political interferences, comprehensive judicial reforms are necessary. Strengthening the legal framework for judicial independence, ensuring the transparency of judicial appointments, and fostering public accountability, are critical steps toward restoring trust in the judiciary. Additionally,

* Reinforcing the separation of powers will help protect the judiciary from undue political pressure. These reforms are essential not only for Pakistan but for our democracy where the judiciary serves as a fundamental check on power.

Restoring judicial independence will have far-reaching implications for governance in Pakistan. A judiciary free from political interference will be able to deliver timely and impartial justice, ensuring that citizens' rights are protected.

Strengthening the judiciary will also enhance the legitimacy of political institutions, improve Pakistan's international standing, and contribute to a more stable and just society. Ultimately, the restoration of judicial independence will help ensure the survival of democracy and the rule of law in Pakistan.
