Q#1 Precis

Title: "How Corruption is Normalized in the Society."

Small irregularities, however tiny they seem, contribute to the normalization of corruption in a society. Normalization then leads to shake the foundation of trust and fairness people have in the system. Small compromises, made by officials, however harmless they seem, bend the whole system of equality and fairness.

Other than ethical considerations, corrupt or unfair practices become an obstacle and hinder the progress of a society. As more less competent get their way through unfair means, the deserving people suffer and society gets impacted as a whole.

On a larger scale, corruption spreads hopelessness and resentment among people as they tend to take justice as unattainable. It further makes people desensitized to larger crimes and weakens the

(1) The primary reason most people fail to keep their New Year resolutions is that their resolutions root in impulsive desires or societal pressures. They set goals that are idealistic and not fully aligned with their everyday life and responsibilities.

(2) Resolutions set by people tend to be ineffective because they, more often, are not realistic. Their resolutions do not align with their day-to-day life and responsibilities, therefore, remain unachieved.

(3) New year The start of a new year provides a season to start fresh.

It symbolizes renewal and rebirth.

Despite peoples' failure to achieve the resolutions, they keep making them because of the hope the start of a new year provides them.

(4) To make real change, people need to realign their goals with their everyday life. Instead of setting idealistic goals, attainable goals should be designed with proper time-frame.
