Problems of a Pakistani Citizen

The problem of schengen countries for rejecting Pakistani's citizens visa seems insignificant. Application for visa is like a file of dreams which will is bound to be rejected on bogus reasons. On contrary, if a western citizen seeks a Pakistani visa, we welcome them warmly. These countries think of Pakistanis as chaotic humans but actually ~~we~~ ~~by~~ ~~the~~ ~~time~~ we are already done with visa and documentation process, spending rest of energy on regrets. They need to see Pakistanis as humans. They might get idea when they experience this themselves.

1. George Foreman was a great boxer, turned into businessman. The reasons behind his transition include his first defeat in 1974 by Muhammad Ali which led him to retirement with a backup of $5 million for a peaceful life. But it proved to be a wrong move and soon he realized it by being broke and workless. He reinvented himself and joined boxing with a cheerful and lighthearted personality. He became oldest heavyweight champion. Then a company approached him for advertisement, he made a counteroffer of branding his product on his name which proved to be a jackpot for him. Then he sold name rights for $137.5 m. This calculated move by him was a right decision. So these are the ~~right~~ reasons of his transition from boxing to business.

2. The Foreman grill had a unique design that allowed grease to drain off one side along with advertisement strategy of featuring Foreman cooking burgers surrounded by children and fun proved to have a competitive advantage.

3. Foreman made a right choice by selling the name rights as he would have faced loss because of increased competition and saturation in the market.

4. This story evoked sentiments of success and failure, right and wrong choices, well-calculated and miss-calculated moves, hardwork and resilience, reinventing and understanding that true success comes not just from fame but by using fame wisely.

5. In my opinion, the text did justice with Foreman and his struggles. It truly expressed how he took one wrong decision at peak of his career, suffered, reinvented himself from scratch, became famous and used his fame wisely. The text did quite well in portraying his transition from boxing to business.

Translation.

An African philosopher once said, when British came to Africa, they had modernity and we had land. They said, we came here for your advancement. We trusted them blindly. When we came into senses, we had development and they had our land. Likewise, they had facebook and whatsapp when science of social network came into existence. They said they were for free. We trusted them and when came into ~~senses~~ ^{senses}, we had whatsapp and facebook and they had our freedom and personal information. So, whenever something is for free, we have to give up our freedom as its cost.
