Q.3

1)

There are couple of factors behind Foreman's transition from boxing to business. Foreman loved the product design of a grill company that approached him. His wife also played role in this transition as she was the one who persuaded him. Lastly, he could use some money. These factors combined resulted in Foreman's transition from boxing to business.

Although the George Foreman grill had unique design but the real competitive advantage was that it had been featured by George Foreman. He recorded commercials where he focused more on family and fun than product. His strategy proved successful, providing product with considerable competitive advantage and making incredible sales.

3.

If Foreman had not sold the name rights, he would not have made the profit, he made by selling them. The competition was increasing in the market and it was becoming saturated. Had Foreman not used his business acumen, he wouldn't have made the profit.

4.

Contrasted and complementary sentiments are evoked in story. At one place, George Foreman was criticized for making bad decisions, spending in prodigal manner and making poor financial planning. Later in passage, he was praised for being charismatic, cheerful, resilient and possessing good business acumen.

The text has been fairly successful in presenting the true picture of Foreman and his struggle. The text first talks about his early success. Then, a setback followed by his retirement from boxing. His financial crisis after retirement brought him back to ring. Then comes his transition from boxing to business. Text has successfully captured the true picture of Foreman's life and struggle.

An African thinker once said, "When western came to Africa, they had passion and we had land. They claimed the reason of their arrival is to make Africa successful. We turned a blind eye to it. When awoken, he were left with passion and they got the land. Similarly, when social networking was invented, they had apps like facebook and whatsapp. They told us that they are free to use. We turned a blind eye and when awoken, we realised we had apps like facebook and whatsapp and they in turn got our freedom and personal details. Whenever anything is shown off as free of cost, they had to pay cost through our freedom."
