

Most people often do corruption without knowing the repercussions of this crime. Initially, it seems a small act afterwards, it becomes a normal act. This results into mistrust in government official.

Molding the rules for small favors end up in large scale corruption, halting progress and development.

Moreover, public resources are divided 2 unjustly. When the merit is overlooked the system becomes inefficient. Further, it weakens the societal norms by leveraging ineligible people; creating feeling of resentment in people striving hard by following the rules. Frequent small-scale corruption eventually results in larger crimes. Integrity is reflected through transparency in even smaller action. These actions define the society. Therefore, holding on one's values a fair and equitable environment can be created
