Question # 02 : Précis

The Visa Dilemma of Schengen Countries for Pakistanis

Schengen Versus Pakistani Visa

06/20

It is very difficult for a Pakistani citizen to get a Schengen visa. He is deferred to enter the West with excuses such as incomplete documents, skeptical bank balance and dubious intent. In contrary, the European citizens are granted Pakistani visa with ease. The European Union countries might perceive the Pakistani citizens as a threat to their continent. However, the tedious process of visa disenchant the South Asian nationals. Possibly, these countries will change their attitude towards Pakistan if the former are made to taste their own medicine.

Question # 03: Comprehension.

- 1) What were the reasons behind Foreman's transition from boxing to business?

Foreman had a streak of victory in boxing. He had won 40, with 37 won by knockouts. He then lost to Muhammad Ali in a decisive fight. The loss devastated Foreman and shook his morale. He, therefore, decided to leave boxing, supplemented by the fact that he had finances worth $5 million to turn to boxing.

- 2) What was the competitive advantage of George Foreman Grill?

Contrary to the apprehensions that George Foreman would fail as a boxer upon his re-entry, Foreman made a big name in boxing. He also became a revered celebrity by showing his authentic self and being a good family man. George Foreman advertising the grill was already an advantage. In addition, the grill was geniusly engineered such that the grease drained off on one side of the cookware. The product became a hit.

3) What would have happened if Foreman had not sold the name rights?

There is a general principle of everything in the universe: whatever has a zenith, also has a nadir. Foreman realized this timely. He knew that if he bought the rights at a good time, he must also sell it on the right time. Had he not sold the name rights then a downfall was deemed to happen. The market was getting competitive and the rights would have lost a portion of the value.

4) What kinds of contrasted and complementary sentiments are evoked in the story?

The contrasted sentiments include Foreman's constant success, then downfall, exit and re-entry in boxing. They also include him transitioning to business failing, quitting business and then reluctantly resorting back to it. Complementary sentiments include his belief in himself when he returned to boxing and him following his instincts in investing in the grill company. The story as a whole is a rollercoaster of emotions and experience.

5) How far is the text successful to present the true picture of Foreman and his struggles?

The text is forthright to a great extent in presenting the true image of George Foreman. It highlights both his failures and successes equally. It sheds light on his undefeated championship as well as his downward trajectory in boxing. It also reveals the unsuccessful business ventures of the boxer-turned-businessman as well as the revival of a businessman-turned-boxer. Conclusively, the text does justice in showing the true image of George Foreman.

Question # 07: Translations

05/10

An African scholar once said that when the Britons went to Africa, they had technology and the Africans had swathes of land. They told the natives that the technology was free and in exchange took their lands. Similarly, the Englishmen lured the Africans into exchanging social media applications with their freedom and personal information. Thus whatever comes free, comes at the cost of one's freedom.
