* Question no 2 :

Answer

Tit :

Precis :

The author is concerned about the future of oratory, the orators of ancient times consider themselves to be on highest rank. They believed they were shaping the future. However, in modern times, the care and attention given to the orators have declined. This is due to the various factors, such as influence of written words, the style of broadcasting, and the increased number of individuals participating in meetings and committees. As a result, people today have less interest in orate & speaking and they do not have time to perfect their speech. Sir Winston Churchill is considered a survivor from the golden age of oratory. His speeches are carefully crafted and his words are not chosen randomly, but greatfully gracefully arranged to convey his ideas with elegance. For more than 50 years, He addressed nation and international conflicts, leaving behind collection of speeches that serve as a historical record. Many of his these speeches are considered as the masterpieces of all time and become a part of history. They serve as a lasting tribute to the remarkable man he was.
