In a world of constant change and advanced technology, traditional families stand at a crossroads between the old and a new. As today's world speeds up, the heartbeat of traditional families faces the challenge of seeking harmony in a melody that is both unfamiliar and demanding. Traditional families face the societal changes which includes shift in gender roles, evolving cultural norms, and rapid technological advancements. These contemporary challenges of the world gave birth to the complexities faced by families. However, modern world has developed and prospered bit by bit. In addition to this, the advanced communication system has reshaped the world, brought facilities for the people but traditional families find it difficult to integrate with modern world and its developments. Moreover the economic system has also prospered but families are struggling with the expenses. Rigid gender roles made it difficult for families to distribute the responsibilities among family members.

to tackle the living expenses. Families rooted in their culture encounter challenges when adjusting to the changes of the current world.

Traditional family system typically includes a nuclear family structure with parents and their children living in a joint family, following cultural norms and roles assigned to each family member. Such as a married couple living with their children in the same household, with distinct roles such as the father, head of the family as a breadwinner and the mother managing the household and childcare, sending kids to school.

Societal changes in the modern world bring various challenges. It is challenging for traditional families to live in the modern world and trying to fit in it. In traditional family there might be set of expectations for the roles of men and women. However, societal changes demand more equality, challenges for families to adapt dual-career households, shared responsibilities

This shift can lead to renegotiating traditional roles and finding new ways to navigate family structures.

Evolution of the modern world introduced rapid technological advancements.

It has changed the communication sources and brought more advanced facilities to communicate with one another. Moreover, the transportation system has been given a new shape in the contemporary world.

Similarly, the automation system of communication is introduced on a vast level. Communication has become more easier than before. The widespread use of smartphones and platforms like whatsapp, facebook, instagram enabled instant text and voice messages and even video calls. The convenience of these applications has transformed how individuals and businesses communicate. But these technological advancements posed obstacles for traditional families.
