Integrity of state Institutions vital for economic development

Question #02

Precis

“The Three Pillars of Government”

The three foundational state institutions, judiciary, legislative, and executive, demand respect in order to function properly. Judiciary provides justice and interprets laws. Only an independent judiciary ensures a just legal system. The legislative branch represents masses via elected members. The uninterrupted practice of democratic values in legislature reinforces democracy. The executive branch enforces legislations. The trust of citizens in governing bodies enables them to work properly. Thus, a collaborative work of state institutions in a democratic environment promises sustainable development of a nation. Therefore, these state institutions should be rendered by political parties and citizens must acknowledge their importance for progress and development.
