

Q2

Title: Respecting democratic institutions is essence of national development

The judiciary, legislative branch and executive branch, all are respectable state institutions.

The Judiciary is responsible for providing justice, and interpreting the Constitution. Whereas, legislative branch represents the common people.

Similarly, executive branch's function is to implement laws and policies.

Both the citizens and leaders should respect these state institutions because it is mandatory for effective governance. Moreover, respecting these institutions is also prerequisite for successful democracy.

In this regard, political leaders should be role models for citizens through their conduct. Obeying these institutions is both a societal responsibility. and It is also prerequisite for the success of democracy and that of a nation.
