

maintaining the integrity and respect institutions is vital for democratic growth and development of the country

Q2) Make a précis of the following.

For smooth functioning of democracy, respecting the state branches is a requisite. Judiciary is a state branch that acts as a protector of law.

Ensuring its independence and integrity will ensure a fair legal system.

Similarly, the legislative branch represents the will of the people.

The elected representatives in the legislature should be equally respected, for an effective legislation. The third branch is executive that enforces the law.

The citizen must have confidence in the government officials' capabilities, to implement their duties rightly. Having said that, leaders must also embody essential democratic elements to inspire public respect. Thus, upholding the state institutions respect ensures the stable democracy.
