Answer no 1:

Implications of climate change for children in developing countries.

Outline:

1) Introduction

As we know that developing world has brought several environmental conditions that are not suitable for life on Earth. Climate change is one of the environmental condition that is gradually getting worse. It has now become the global threat. The Global narrative on climate change:

"The World Eco System is in danger."

Both the developed and the developing world is facing its implications in various conditions such as floods, tsunami, Earth quakes and other natural disasters, However the developed world have resources to face its implications but the developing world do not enough sources to face its effects.

Climate change is dangerous for every human being specially for children in developing countries. The rise in temperature and other effects of climate change has created certain medical conditions for the children of developing world and now it is the responsibility of both type of the countries to control the climate change.
