QUESTION 38

Comprehension Passage 8

Question no 1:-

Ad hominem is a way of winning an argument used back days in British court of law. Under which if the attorney for the defense do not have legal points to win the case he comes forward and abuse the opponent lawyer. If the lawyer backs out the attorney of defense wins the case. As which happened in the case of Lincoln when he used ad hominem in his first Jury cases.

Question no 2:-

The opponent of Lincoln was wearing a shirt new city-slicker of the 1840's which used to be buttoned at back. Lincoln came in front of jury and said that he is assured that the Jury will not be influenced by the knowledge of law his opponent hold as he don't even know which side<sub>↓</sub> should be on front. And of shirt he was said to have won the case.

Question no 3:-

Lincoln tactics was completely non malacious as he intended to hurt and disgrace his opponent so that he back out and Juicy announce him the winner. In the view of result it does not matter whether the tactic was malacious or not because the all he need to do is to win his case which he did no matter how.

Question no 4:-

Lincoln took a great risk by using ad-hominem because if the opponent gives a better argument which Juicy like more he must have lost the case. If I was his opponent I should gave a counter argument and not let him win.

Title 8- International law: A delicate balance

International law, distinct from municipal law, lacks the foundation of overwhelming social consensus and central authority. Unlike individuals, states are not inherently subject to law; international law operates between them, not above. The contradiction promotes some to deny its legal character, citing a lack of effective sanctions. The theory of consent resolves this, asserting that binding international norms arise from state acceptance. The uneasy compromise reflects on diverse evaluations - some consider it a sham, while others envision a comprehensive code drafted by lawyers to ensure global peace.
