INTRODUCTION:

Hassan took his grandmother for a checkup and noticed the role of female doctors in a hospital. He then went to school and got educated by female teachers. On his way back he observed women in pharmacy, shopping malls and other common places. He visualized the role of women in every field and wondered how the world would be without women. Without any second thought the first ~~thought~~ idea was that the world would be incomplete without women. The immense integration and engagement of women in political, social and economic world suggests that the world would be incomplete without their participation. The contribution of women starts with giving birth to another human and then their development. The exceptional skills of dialogue, peace and cooperation inculcated in women renders them crucial for global cooperation and consensus development.
