7) Conclusion

The developing country, especially Pakistan has been suffering numerous political, social and economic crises ^{since inception}. These crises have been increasing due to lack of good leadership and constitutional crises. Therefore, the country has faced both best dictatorship and worst democracy. In the history of the country, best dictatorship was very helpful other than worst democracy.

There are some aspects of best dictatorship which were faced the country. Four military leader Ayub Khan, Zia-ul-Haq, Yafa Khan and last but not the least General Mushraff. Local government system was introduced by General Ayub Khan whereby participation of political leader increased at the grass root level. Furthermore, economic growth of the country reached highest level at first time in its history. Besides ⁱⁿ General Mushraff's era, economic structure was revised. Additionally, Political Polarization was reduced in the era of all military leader. In 1999, the chief executive officer Gen Mushraff fall Nawaz shariff government because political instability had reached high level. Moreover, agricultural sector was boosted in the regime of military leader. Green revolution was brought in the country whereby country GDP growth boosted. In fact, worst democracy is not better than the best democracy, because it creates more crises for a country such as Pakistan. Political instability is a example of worst democracy. However best dictatorship stabilized the country in the history of Pakistan.

Such as building roads, resolving financial crises and promoting education value.

Therefore, the first local government system was introduced in General Ayub era through Basic democracy in 1960.

Besides, in the era of General Zia-ul-Haq, value of local government increased in 1979. Three tier system, such Tehsil Nazim, District Nazim and divisional Nazim was introduced by General Zia. Last but not the least, in 2002, Gen Mushraff enhanced the system of local government and conducted election. However, local government is a sign of best dictatorship in the Pakistan.

Additionally, local government system has lost its value in civilian government. Civilian governments have failed various time to conduct local government election whereby poverty has increased at grass root level. Firstly, from 1988 to 1999, there were not conducted local government election in which economic of the country decreased. According to world Bank reports, from 1988 to 1999, Pakistan lost $3 billion due to political instability and weak structure of local government. On the other hands, first time order was passed for conducting local government election in 2009. But, it was not conducted due to political instability and lack of budget. The biggest province of Pakistan, Punjab' local government election was held in 2019 during Imran Khan government. Therefore, democracy has failed to eradicate the problems at grass root level in Pakistan.

Furthermore, increasing of agricultural growth in the country was a best initiative of Pakistani military leaders. Agricultural sector is a main sector which helps to boost the economic growth and enhance national and international trade of the country. The best dictatorship of the country helped to enhance the agricultural growth of the country. For instance, during the era of General Ayub Khan, green revolution was brought for strengthening agricultural sector. The government of Ayub Khan conducted dialogue at international level for boosting agricultural trade.

Hybrid seeds and financial assistance were provided to farmer whereby cotton, wheat and rice growth enhanced. Besides, GDP growth of the country reached 9.8 which was the highest value in the country's history. Thereby, best dictatorship is most helpful for increasing the growth of agricultural sectors rather than worst democracy.
