English precis

Q/NO: 02

Make the precis of the topic and suggest suitable title.

both are contradictory

TITLE: International law & State sovereignty are mutually inclusive.

PRECIS:

International law codifies the behavior of the states as do the municipal law, in case of individuals. But international law is different, in that there is no central authority to enforce it on states, because international law is not superior to the states unlike the states superior to the individuals. ~~do not start a sentence with due to~~ this, the professional lawyers reject the legality of international law, being devoid of sanctions. Sovereignty and of states cannot coexist with the legal system, which limits them. This impasse is resolved by the theory of consent, which makes binding of international law a form of sovereignty. In the ~~Montodon~~ case, the world court refused any treaty, which would bar the states to be sovereign. International law has diversity in its evaluation, some terming it deceptive and others claiming, the lawyers can ensure peace. But either of the view is hollow in its conclusion of international law, which bridges the international order and sovereignty of states.

Q1: After reading ..... 'ad hominem' mean?

Ad hominem appears from the context of the text the practice of abusing the persons whose arguments cannot be signed. It means, one lacking the ability or ability to stake the arguments, resorts to discrediting the person, preventing such indefensible arguments. Thus, ~~from facing the issue~~

~~adding insult over the trivial thing~~ refers ad hominem

Q2: How did Lincoln succeed in convincing the jury?

Lincoln's opponent was wearing the city slicker shirt, which was buttoned up in the back, Lincoln argued in front of the jury by asking how a man may pretend to have knowledge to influence, when he does not, which side of the shirt is the front side. So, it was the Lincoln's ad-hominem, which succeeded him in convincing the jury.

Q3: How was Lincoln ..... or not?

Given the lack of <sup>the</sup> experience, which his opponent had, Lincoln pointed out, which side of his shirt was supposed to be front was not malicious. The ad-hominem is the address and political shrewdness instead of being malicious. Judicial so course leading to an outcome supposedly does not justify the means, so the malicious tactic could matter after the result.

Q4: What risk did ..... Lincoln's move?

The jury was made by the congressmen, so the Lincoln, in use of his ad-hominem was not sure, whether it would work or not. It was an overgeneralization of Lincoln that he linked the knowledge of his opponent with his fallacy. However, the Lincoln's move could be argued by stating that the shirt was intentionally buttoned from backside to know whether, the Lincoln could notice such an apparent thing or not.
