

Date:

Recis

Domestic law is widely accepted and enforceable, International law lacking the acceptance and enforceability.

Individuals of any states are not bound to accept the international law but their consent.

International law bound the state through explicit or implicit acceptance.

-this binding express or represent their autonomy of state. However, a clear recognition between the functioning of both laws is lacking. It is difficult in defining the nature of international law, some deny it effectiveness while other support it for ensuring the world peace overall.

International law is a collection of rules and principles which are binding on states.

plz ensure one third of original passage plz understanding of the passage plz work on representing originality of view

Date: _____

Translation

The rise and fall of every nation is a tale, but it requires a sense of loss and national determination. After the second world war, Japan faced very difficulties. Atomic bomb completely destroyed the two cities. However, for a Japanese more significant humiliation was the seizure of their capital. General MacArthur's humiliating attack ~~was~~ adopted with the capture, turned the tide of revenge within the Japanese. Not in the battle field, but in every other sector, Japan began to defeat America. Finally, within a few decades, this nation succeeded in reclaiming its lost position. In this story, there is a significant lesson for Pakistan.