Question no 2

Just As people are bound to municipal law; in the same way, state is regulated by International law which is different from domestic law due to the absence of social consensus and central authority which enforces the rules with punishment. This has made professional lawyers to deny the effectiveness of International law as it lacks punishment. Either states can be truly sovereign without the law or if law exists, then states cannot be truly sovereign. This conspiracy has been resolved by theory of consent which states that states are bound to International law as it is formed by their acceptance. Thus it becomes a form of exercising control. To conclude, International law is based upon a compromise. There are different claims regarding it but no one is able to balance the sovereignty of states and international order.

Title: International law and Sovereignty of states.
