ANSWERS

1-

Yes, after reading his selection, I have a clear idea of meaning of 'ad hominem'. 'Ad hominem' is a practice by the lawyers in the court room to avoid from the arguments of opposite lawyer. It means to abuse or discredit the other person, or to go out of the context, when you cannot have do not have your on point arguments to defend yourself.

2-

Lincoln used the ad hominem and talked about the dressing of the opposite lawyer standing against him. He already knew the reaction of the jury about raising the point of fashion sense, so he attack the opponent, simply saying that you people should not be convinced of the knowledge of law when he does not even know which side of his shirt should be in front.

3-

Lincoln took the risk by using ad hominem, because there was chance of the jury to not to be convinced and the lawyer might have countered him with stronger arguments.

If I had been an opposing lawyer, I might have encounter Lincoln's move by saying that "lawyer should be relevant, ~~it's her~~ ~~show~~ his duty is to come up with facts and arguments not with lame fashion sense suggestion, it's a court not a fashion show."

4

3-
