Q#9 Precis

International laws limit the State sovereignty

Municipal laws governs individual behaviour in domestic setup and international laws regulate the states. However, these two laws are completely different in nature. In contrary to domestic laws, the international laws exhibit no legal bindings. Moreover, international laws are not above states but these the laws between states. Another, difference between these two laws is that only domestic law has the central authority to imposed sanctions.

In addition to this, consequence of accepting international rules and regulation cost state's sovereignty.

Paradoxically, it is argued that accepting bindings by international laws, is new form of exercising sovereignty. Hence, international laws and codes are based on formula of compromise. All kinds of international laws, codes, rules and regulations put the limitations to state's sovereignty
