The Applications and Limitations of International Law

The behavior of individuals is governed by municipal law, whereas state behaviors are regulated by international law. The main difference between the two is that the latter is non-binding in nature and lacks central authority. Due to this very reason, some professional lawyers altogether deny its legal character. The sovereignty of the state and international legal system are incompatible, as either state is sovereign, in that case, there is no higher authority other than the state, or if the state accepts the international law as binding, its sovereignty is compromised. Due to this lenient approach to international law, it is of lesser importance. Owing to this, some regard it as useless, whereas some consider it as an important means to ensure peace on earth, if it is properly drafted.

trial lawyer. He presented his points with all the legal principles but he was wearing city-slicker shirt of 1840's, which buttoned up the back. Lincoln ridiculed his fashion style by saying that defence lawyer do not even know which side of the shirt should be in the front. His shrewdness made him to win the case.

Q3. Lincoln tactic was "non-malicious" since it was not intended to harm others. He just used it as a tool of his shrewdness to win the case. In view of the result, it doesn't matter if the tactic was malicious or not, because he had achieved his purpose of winning the case.

Q4. Lincoln took risk of using 'ad hominem' because he had no solid arguments to prove the case and the opponent was a seasoned trial lawyer, which left him with no other option.
