PART II (Q-2)

Title: Embracing Dubai's Evolution:

Balancing Innovation with Resilience for a Sustainable

→ In an interview, the founder of modern Dubai talked about how history repeats itself. He said that tough times make strong people, strong people make easy times, easy times make weak people, and weak people bring back tough times. He emphasized the importance of raising strong individuals instead of dependent ones. This idea shows a deep understanding of how history and generations work.

The change from using camels to fancy cars in Dubai shows how the city has grown quickly and become more modern. It suggests that in the future, people might go back to using camels, which could mean things getting harder again. This cycle shows that tough times make things easier and better. But too much comfort can lead to problems. Weak people in easy times struggle, bringing back tough times.

He wants to make strong people, not those who depend on others. Warriors are tough and responsible, not just physically strong. On the other hand, parasites are people who rely on others without doing much themselves. Education is crucial for the future in order to avoid problems and keep doing well for a long time.

As Dubai keeps getting bigger and changing, it needs to find a good mix of being fancy and modern while also making sure its people can handle tough times. History teaches that ongoing efforts and strong individuals are key facing challenges.
