

Q7 Translate the following into English:

If you have travelled internationally and taken a transit flight from Dubai, Qatar, Kuwait etc. then you might have noticed that the atmosphere of the gate where the Japanese people sit while waiting for the flight is peaceful and they all look quite similar in their gait, dress up, discipline, and facial features. If you walk across the German gate, the situation would be similar. If you visit the gate of Malaysia, China, Spain, Australia, or New Zealand; ^{the} situation would be almost the same; a national unity would be observed. While walking, you reach the Pakistani gate where instead of one nation you see many. Majority people look sad. Noise of children crying. Some are dressed in pant shirt and jeans, some in shalwar kameez. Somewhere a newly wedded bride with henna on her hands is desperate to meet her husband while somewhere else are the elderly mothers in law, walking with pain in their joints. There are young people who work abroad sitting quietly in one corner, with a scarf on their shoulder and foreign candies for children in their hands and then there are passengers of business class, dressed in safari suits.

Topic: History: A lesson for the future

Q2 Make a precis:

The founder of modern Dubai, Sheikh Rashid, while explaining the societal development and predicting the future of his country said that the previous generations faced difficult times. These hard times developed in them the qualities of strong men. They worked hard and created easy and prosperous times. This prosperity will be enjoyed by this generation as well as the next one. But the generation after that will again see difficult time as the current prosperity will make the society comfortable which will make the man weak overtime. He advocates cultivation of qualities of strong men such as strength, hard work, resilience, perseverance, sense of responsibility and self-reliance in future generations through education and upbringing. Instilling such qualities in the society will ensure sustained prosperity.

Sheikh Rashid is of the view that Dubai must invest in its human capital, along with investing in information and technology, as an efficient human capital is a must for sustained prosperity and to prepare the country to deal with hard times that may come.
