Dynamic nature of societal development

Founder of Dubai shared his wisdom regarding the cyclic nature of development in the society. According to him, his parents and forefathers rode camels but he and his children are riding luxury cars. He predicted that his great-grand children will go back to camels. Difficult circumstances give rise to strong men but easy situations create weak men. Nations need to produce warriors not parasites to overcome the regression. The modernization of Dubai marks the hardwork of the leadership, who overcame the tough circumstances and created ease and comfort for society. Today people of Dubai enjoy luxuries thus they are reluctant to leave their comfort zones. ~~Consequently~~ They will face hardships in the future due to their weakening strengths. The only solution to prevent this decay is to raise warriors through education and by instilling qualities of diligence, self-reliance and perseverance. Societies can prepare for future if they understand the dynamic nature of progress and work on human capital along with infrastructural developments. As difficult situations need tough and resilient people only they ~~then regression and deterioration~~ have the potential to reverse the regression.
