Q:07) Translate the following:-

If you have ever traveled internationally and transited through places like Dubai, Qatar, Kuwait, etc, you would have observed that the atmosphere at the gates where passengers are waiting to board flights to Japan is usually calm. There, travelers appear almost alike in their gestures, attire, discipline and demeanor.

As you walk past the German Gate, you would notice a similar situation. Whether it's Malaysia, China, Spain, Australia, or New Zealand, visiting all gates presents a similar scenario. There's a sense of national uniformity. However, when you reach Pakistani Gate, instead of seeing uniformity of one nation, you witness diversity. The majority of faces are relaxed, children's voices are heard crying, people are dressed in half-pants and jeans. Somewhere, there are newly-wed brides with henna on their hands, eagerly waiting to meet their in-laws, while on other side elderly mothers-in-law, weary from traveling for work abroad sit.

Some are squatting in corners, having come for foreign labor, shoulders adorned with a backpack and hands full of candies for children, while others are dressed in safari suits, businessmen traveling for bureaucratic purposes.

Q:-02) Write precis of passage and suggest suitable title.

Title: The Cyclical wisdom of Sheikh Rashid: From camels to warriors.

Sheikh Rashid, the visionary founder of modern Dubai, shared profound insights on societal development in an interview. He described a cyclical pattern in history: adversity breeds strength, strength leads to prosperity, prosperity leads to complacency and complacency invites adversity. This cycle, exemplified by transitions from luxury to simplicity over generations, underscores Sheikh Rashid's foresight.

His call to "raise warriors, not parasites" emphasizes cultivating resilience, strength and responsibility in future generations. Warriors embody qualities like fortitude and perseverance, crucial for overcoming challenges and sustaining progress. Conversely, parasites symbolize those who rely on ~~the~~ others without contributing.

Education and upbringing play vital role in shaping societies.

Instilling values of hard work and self-reliance prepares individuals to navigate adversity and maintain prosperity. Sheikh Rashid advocates for Dubai to balance innovation with investments in human capital for long-term success.

In conclusion, Sheikh Rashid's wisdom reminds us that achieving and maintaining prosperity requires continuous effort and vigilance.

Understanding this cyclic nature enables societies to prepare effectively for future challenges, ensuring resilience and strength in times of difficulty.
