Title: The cyclical Nature of Societal Development: Insights from Sheikh Rashid
 "Resilience Over Comfort: Dubai's Future"

In an interview, Sheikh Rashid, the founder of modern Dubai, reflects on the cyclical nature of societal development through a poignant metaphor. My grand father rode a camel, my father rode a camel, my father I drive a mercedes, my son drives a Land rover and my grandson will drive a Land Rover, but my great-grand son will have to ride a camel again." He underscores how hard times forge strong individuals who create prosperous periods, but these prosperous times eventually lead to weaker individuals, setting the stage for future hardships. Rashid advocates for raising resilient and responsible individuals (as warriors) rather than dependent ones (parasites). His vision emphasizes the importance of education and cultivating values of hard work and self-reliance to sustain long-term societal success. Dubai's future growth must balance innovation with fostering resilience among its people, ensuring prosperity is maintained through continuous effort and nurturing capable individuals.
