"Resilience Over Comfort: Dubai's Future"

Q.2) Title = Reflecting on Patterns of Societal Development

Development of a society is not a linear process, rather, it can become a cyclical one. Using a metaphor derived from an interview with Sheikh Rashid, founder of modern Dubai, the author describes the transient nature of adversity and prosperity. According to the author, difficult times

He advocates for raising "warriors" - resilient, resourceful, and responsible individuals - rather than "parasites" who depend on others.

These qualities enable future periods of ease, however, the onset of ease erases the urgency to cultivate those initial qualities. With time, hard men blessed with ease transition to weak, complacent men afflicted with hard times. To prepare for avoidance of this pattern, education and an upbringing capable of instilling critical survival values is needed. In the context of Dubai, it is necessary to invest in not only infrastructure but also human capital. Sheikh Rashid's words remind individuals that prosperity is not permanent, and one must heed this reminder to adequately prepare for potential hard times ahead.
