

LACK OF CIVIC SENSE IS PUSHING COUNTRY BACKWARD

- 1- Introduction
- 2- Debunking the term "civic sense"
- 3- Civic responsibility as an indicator of country's progress.
- 4- How the lack of civic sense is hindering country's progress.
  - a. Lack of civic sense leads to lawlessness in the country
  - b. Creates a trust deficit between citizens and authorities
  - c. Stifles social growth
  - d. Contributes to environmental degradation
  - e. Leads to public health issues
  - f. Economic stasis
  - g. Negative Image at global level
- 5- Breaking the cycle: Civic sense can be nurtured by
  - a. Educational programs

b - Community initiatives

c - Strong leadership

6- Conclusion.

Civic sense is the collective awareness of citizens to uphold social responsibilities and respect public resources.

It entails adhering to the social norms, rules and etiquettes that contribute to smooth functioning of society or a country.

Among the other indicators of country's advancement civic responsibility is one of them. Succintly, collective civic awareness fosters the rule and law, social cohesion, environment protection and economic prosperity. Nonetheless, if a country lacks these mentioned indicators of state affluence, indeed, it spurs the country's developmental deficit.

Lawlessness, social disunity, environmental degradation, public health issues, negative image at global level and economic stasis are some of witnessed ramifications of lack of public consciousness or lack of civic responsibility.

Nevertheless, civic sense can be nurtured.

Educational programs, community initiatives and strong leadership can play important role in promoting responsible citizenship.

Since the notion of civic sense exists in various manifestations; nevertheless, at prima facie it alludes to the adherence to the rules and principles of community, society or country. This multifaceted notion encompasses in itself myriad of aspects such as abiding by the laws of state, considering others or non-intrusion approach in others matter and showing courtesy and respect for others.

Besides, social responsibilities entailing the public areas protection also fall under the umbrella of this notion. Moreover, another broader facet of civic sense also wraps up the voting or suffrage volunteering for community causes and staying informed about social issues. So, the civic responsibilities indeed spur the country's development and can embark the country on trajectory of prosperity.

Albeit, the edifice of country's growth stands on numerous pillars; nonetheless, the civic responsibility reigns supreme among all of them - the collective consciousness of citizens, thus, is the propellor of rule and law; ultimately, results in harmonious society - Additionally, it fosters the economic development by utilizing efficient resources utilization - What's more that respecting public property like parks, roads and utilities also aids in economic development, thus, by reducing maintenance cost. On the top of that, bourgeoning mutual respect and collaboration among individuals can be one of ramification - It, therefore, promotes unity in the society, that can be the indicator of positive development. World bears testament that civic sense is the pointer of advancement - Scandinavian countries or developed countries can be exemplified in this regard

Since, civic sense spurs the country's advancement; yet the paucity of responsibilities among individual puts the country on backward trajectory. The most commonly consequence can be seen in the manifestation of lawlessness. When citizens do not regard the state laws the result is the chaos in the society. Lawlessness itself leads to myriad of evils and disorder or entropic atmosphere prevails in the country.

Along with lawlessness the another important ramification is the trust deficit between individuals and authorities. Owing to lack of sense<sup>of</sup> responsibility at higher level or ~~in~~ authorities, the commoners do not trust the officials thus the gap is created and various evils like crimes are then ~~take~~ permitted in society.

A lack of respect for others ignoring queues or displaying intolerance can create social friction and impede the cooperation within communities - This can make it difficult to address common challenges and work towards shared goals.

Moreover, environmental degradation is another outcome of lack of civic responsibility. When people neglect waste disposal or damage public property it creates an unclean and unhealthy environment this can lead to pollution, the spread of disease and decreased property value.

Spitting in public not following hygienic practices or ignoring safety regulations can contribute to spread of diseases - It can also lead to accidents and injuries due to reckless behaviour.

But along with all these deteriorating effects, the civic sense can be nurtured - Educational programs, community initiatives and strong leadership can all play a role in promoting responsible citizenship. When people understand the importance of civic sense and feel empowered to participate, a country can move forward and create a better future for all.