The author asked a question: In what movie did the villain prove himself right? He replied that in action film "300", Ephialtes was right as he betrayed Leonidas and defeated Spartan army. The author justifies Ephialtes action by explaining that Spartan society forced unfit infants into ditches, and Ephialtes, born with twisted body, was sowed by his parents who took him away from Sparta. His father trained him to become soldier, hoping he could serve the Spartan Army. Eventually, Ephialtes followed Leonidas and 300, seeking audience with king. He begged Leonides to allow him to join fight desiring a noble death. Despite displaying skill, Ephialtes was rejected due to inability to raise shield.

The author suggests that if Leonides had given him command they could have been victorious - Instead, Ephialtes was offered a place in Persian army which he accepted only on conditionality of receiving uniform - However, he was never accepted by sparta.
