3 - Conclusion

Imagine a society where trust is rare, where leaders betray public confidence, where the chasm between rich and poor widens daily, can such society or state ever rise? The answer is for sure yes. A state can not rise economically when it is down morally. So, above mentioned is a true picture of Pakistan. Pakistan's ~~decay~~^{decline} is fundamentally rooted in moral decay, evidenced by rampant corruption, pervasive social inequality, and the erosion of civic values, which collectively undermine the nation's economic and social stability.

Here are discussed some of the indicators of moral decline which clearly depicts that Pakistan is morally low in its values, by overcoming these moral ills Pakistan become can prosperous country where Individuals and communities thrive economically and enjoy a high Quality of life

First of all is corruption. From the corridors of power to everyday transactions, corruption has become entrenched in country's fabric. This culture of dishonesty and graft is a moral drain and impacting country financially, eroding trust in leaders.
Every person is involved in corruption from politicians, civil servants, from high level head of an institute to a low level junior level clerk, from a Business man to a poen.
No one leaves a chance of corruption and dishonesty. So prevalent level of corruption in a country is a hindrance for Pakistan's Progress.

High profile corruption scandals involving politicians & bureaucrats are symptomatic of a broader issue: the lack of Accountability. When leaders and public servants involve in such acts without facing consequences, it sends a message that unethical behaviour is permissible. Absence of Robust Accountability is so destructive for a society. No one is scarce for any of his/her act.

In Addition to this, another significant aspect of Pakistan's moral decline is persistent social inequality. The disparity between rich and poor continues to widening exacerbated by a system that favours the elite only. Rich are free for their acts, all the facilities are only for ~~po~~ rich.

This inequality is a moral issue, as it reflects a society that tolerates systematic injustice. Access to quality education, healthcare and basic human rights is limited for many, breeding resentment among less privileged.
