

QUESTION NO: 02

PRECI'S:

Rules of Society Dictate Actions of Individuals

Sometimes, the norms of society reflect a stark nuance which redirects an individual to take certain actions and projects him as a villain. Similarly, Ephialtes in film of 300 was compelled to be excluded from fighting due to his disability, as Spartans believed that men of slightly imperfect bodies were to be rendered as incapable and immediately killed.

His family fled to ~~Xerxes~~ due to the display of this austere rule by the Spartans. He trains himself well to exhibit good spear skills but to only face rejection of Leonidas, the king. He is pushed to join the Persian side in return of his wish for acquiring uniform. Hence, the path taken by Ephialtes <sup>was</sup> not of betrayal as he was not even accepted to live by Spartans in the first place.

QUESTION NO: 03

Part (A):

General George S. Patton was considered as a controversial military figure in American history due to his belligerent actions and unbiased opinions. His most attention garnering

:0A

Statement of regarding World War II has managed to mark him as controversial. In the statement, he explicitly describes that the United States should have targeted Moscow as well. Therefore, the direct blame on Moscow as enemy of US has rendered him controversial.

PART (B):

According to Alan Alexrod the perspective of Patton is clearly justified. Alan Alexrod in his book "Patton: A Biography" elucidates the idea propounded by Patton on claiming the bigger threat of Soviet Union towards America in comparison with Nazi's. Soviet Union posed a more severe danger to America through weaker affecting American freedom and democracy. Hence, the ideas of Alan Alexford align with the perspective of Patton.

Part (c):

The outcome of Patton capturing Moscow could have been in the form of prevention Cold war and altered result of world war II.

The end result of this hypothetical scenario is analysed in a 2015 article in the National Interest titled "What if Patton Had Captured Moscow?" by Micheal Peck. The author explains the multiple scenarios which could have occurred due to targeting of Moscow, ranging from different result of world War II and absence of Cold war.

Therefore, the outcome in history would have been totally different due to US attack on Soviet Union.

Part (d):

The ~~the~~ contrasting and complimentary sentiments mentioned in the text are the criticism and praise received by Patton, respectively. His outspoken view of US attacking Soviet Union after World War-II ~~at~~ becomes a point of contention for critics. Whereas, his out of the way thinking about the war scenarios, also garners praise for him. Hence, criticism and commendable gesture by some ~~are~~ historians are the ~~opposite~~ polarising sentiments mentioned in text.

:65

Part (e):

The valuable lesson that leaders can infer from Patton ~~are~~ <sup>is</sup> the ability of exhibiting views that are thinking for ~~the~~ <sup>an</sup> unconventional ways and measures to be adopted during war. This different thought process can completely alter the course of history to come. Moreover, the ~~dis~~ clear display of ideas irrespective from the

of the fear of collecting criticism, is the confidence to be shown by the leaders.

Hence, the world leaders of today can gather multiple lessons from the General Patton's overt display of different views.
