	Ephialtes : A Misunterstood Character.
	In this passage, the author seems to	  be challenging the portrayal of Ephilates.

	be accepted as a soldier. When he finally

	His story challenges the idea of Starting off, knowledge is like a map that shows you where to go, and practical skills are like the vehicle that actually gets you there. But here's the things : having a map is great, but it won't get you far if you don't have the vehicle. In today's fast paced world, the line between knowing something and being able to do it is burrier than ever. We're bombarded In simpler terms, having knowledge about something is no longer enough; people are expected to be able to apply that knowledge effectively in real-world situations. So, the distinction between Knowing something and being able to actually do it is becoming less clear-out So, why does this matter? Well, because the world is changing, and it's changing fast. In the past, having a lot of kinowledge could take you to places. But today, o that is not the case.

	The world has progressed past the need for book smarts - it needs people who can roll up their sleeves and get things done.
	Practical Skills go beyond mere knowledge, they involve the ability to apply knowledge effectively in real-world contexts. This Take the tech industry, for example, where like FAANG (Facebook, Amazon, Apple, Netflig, Google) - care more about what you can do rather than where you went for college.

	In fact, some of the most successful people in tech never finished college! The tech giants have revolutionized the way we work a and communicate. These companies could not care less about your Ivy League province or Harvard degrees. They want to know what you can bring to the table - your skills, your creativity, your ability to think, outside the box!
	And then there's Elon Musk, the real-li	fe Tony Stark, who famously guipped, "You don't need college to learn stuff." For Musk, practical skills are far better than academic credientials any day of the week. After all, who needs a degree when you're busy building rockets and electric cars? Now, what is so good about such an statement? Well, it is not.	с. — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — just the statement, it is also about who it is coming from. Thatois, Elon Musk, the CEO of Tesla and Space X. Besides, it is	• not just Flon Musk, but various other CED's from the Silicon Valley have contribute	d to this narrative of skills and practicality.
