3) Conclusion

"Overpopulation isn't one of the problems.... it's the only problem" a quote by Dr. Charles Hall. Overpopulation is not a new problem, but its pace has become a vital issue for humankind in this century. Overpopulation is a major issue for developing countries as they already face internal issues and have limited resources. It exacerbates the already burdened economy & society. Pakistan is the biggest example of how an oversized population has converted into a liability for the state. People face disparities & issues which leads them into a vicious cycle of poverty. Overpopulation is not only leading the individuals into disparities, but also the state is left into a dilemma of unbalanced control & service provision. Over-population is a cause of over-exploitation of resources. Limited resources are to be managed for the ever growing population. This
