

Answer 1 →

There is no difference between human being's fear of death and children's fear of darkness. In both situations, the fear is raised by the stories and tales that are made by the surroundings. Children hear stories of thieves and ghosts that stick in their minds and increase the fear of darkness, as well as human beings hear about the stories of dying man pain that make them afraid of death.

Answer 2

In a religious view of death, a man who has committed sins and looks upon death it means he wanted to enter into another world and start his new life. It is as he leaves his sinful life and enters another world as a new beginning of life.

Answer 3

Monks have written in their books about the painful experiences of death. They emphasized the physical tortures of themselves as they perceived, it purifies self. Also, the death pain is indescribably agonizing. These kinds of book also raises the fear of death.

Answer 4

Seneca's view of death is like circumstances and the last process of man made the surroundings afraid. For instance, the last ceremony of men, the painful process of dying, pale face of a death man, the mournings of death man's relatives & friends, and rituals all of these process made the death more horrible.

Answer 5

The last ceremony of a man, rituals, the dying process, the pain before the death, and the tales that surrounds by others made the death more horrible.