Title = Rethinking peace in the Nuclear era

In this era, total war is futile due to powerful, resilient nuclear arsenals. Nuclear weapons are immensely destructive, surpassing WWII combined Allied air forces by ten times, with effects spreading globally and impacting future generations.

Today, vast spending on weapons aims to maintain peace, but these stockpiles <sup>are not</sup> ~~are~~ the assurance of peace. Peace is rational goal, though its pursuit is often overlooked and unheard. Our urgent task is to pursue peace, law, and disarmament, inspiring hostile leaders towards enlightenment. We must evaluate our attitude, as vital as others' with each striving towards possibilities of peace. Our attitude towards peace is that it is impossible and unreal which is defeated belief. Believing war is inevitable is defeatist. By clarifying our <sup>peace</sup> goals, we can inspire hope and guide humanity towards achieving peace instead of conflict.
