Q.2

Title : PEACE - a Rational Necessity

According to the author, total war is not a sensible option due to great powers possessing large amounts of nuclear arsenal. Hence, the author talks about peace. In addition, investing billions of dollars annually on purchasing nuclear weapons is the most inefficient way for ensuring peace.

The author perceives peace as the necessary rational end of rational men, yet believing that some think that talking about world peace is of no use until leaders adopt a responsible behavior. Moreover, author emphasizes on reflecting upon one's own attitude individually as well as a nation. For many, it seems an impossible and imaginary task; and the war is inevitable as humans are controlled by irresistible forces. Nevertheless,

QUESTION 7 (a)

A dispute arose recently at a book fair in Lahore because of the presence of stalls where food, drinks and non-literary items were being sold instead of giving attention to books and literary activities which set aside the true essence of the fair.
Many participants expressed frustration and felt that the book fair had become mostly a food market where books, author and literary dialogues were given less space and attention. Due to giving more than due emphasis on the food stalls at the book fair, instead of promoting the study and selling of the books, an argument began that whether this event was ~~the~~ ~~the~~ achieving its literary purpose or just the benefits of trading were being prioritized.
