The author talks about world peace as the ultimate goal of mankind. He correlates peace with war. With the tremendous increase in war might and machinery, engaging in war means complete destruction of world order and peace. Spending on war equipment is one way that acts as a deterrent to war. Proponents of peace should start from working on inner peace. Many people believe that peace can not be achieved without decreasing hostility among world leaders and nations. World Order and peace are idealistic concepts and war is inevitable. Yet the author believes that all the problems are self made and it is important to keep trying to achieve peace and stability.

Q7 Recently, there was a dispute in (Lahore) in a book fair in Lahore. Rather than focusing on books and literary activities, there were multiple stalls that were selling food and non-literary items, that back-seated the actual purpose of the fair: Many attendees expressed their disappointment and felt that "The Book Fair" had majorly become a food street, where books, authors and literary dialogue was given less space and attention. Instead of paying too much emphasis on the food stalls, it should have been on learning and the sale of books. A debate started on whether this event was fulfilling its literary purpose or was simply prioritizing economic benefits.
