Q2) Precis Avoid lengthy titles Peace as a Practical Goal Achieving peace has never been more essential

The author begins by opining that contemporary warfare has made peace paramount, stating that modern nuclear war is illogical. Great powers can use nuclear force as a last resort, which can cause untold destruction, and affect the entire world with radioactivity. Moreover, such weapons ~~use~~ cost billions while remaining unused, which the author believes is an inefficient way towards peace, especially since they only pulverize. The author thus believes peace, while not as attractive as war, is the only logical outcome, and of utmost urgency. There are skeptics of the idea of global peace, until leaders of nations perceived to be belligerent enlighten themselves. While the author hopes and believes this is achievable, he calls for introspection, at an individual and national level, stating that ~~their own~~ attitude matters equally as their opponents. The author believes it is dangerously pessimistic how many believe peace is a surreal idea, making conflict unavoidable. He concludes by asking for peace to be seen as possible, and helping others to perceive it as such, and move towards it.

Q(ii)

The writer does not endorse the sayings about the red sky, stating that while at times it could be true, it is more frequently false. Instead, the author endorses the use of weather science and meteorology for weather forecasts.

Q(iii)

Weather forecasting is a science, and follows a scientific method. It is known as meteorology. This science uses instruments such as a thermometer and barometer to be able to measure different weather variables.

(iv) Write factors affecting the weather
It is difficult to forecast the weather because of the many variables that affect it. Each variable requires study before a reliable forecast can be made, and these variables all act simultaneously and are constantly changing. Therefore, forecasting weather is not easy.

(v)
The people would use the moon to help them forecast the weather. This was done by studying the shape of the moon. People believed that the moon held a lot of water, particularly a crescent moon. The people believed this would mean that rain was incoming. Thus, the people used the moon to forecast weather.
