

QUESTION : 09

39/80

The Pursuit of Peace ✓

Total war is unnecessary in an era where nuclear capabilities threaten global annihilation.

The destructive power of a single nuclear weapon surpasses that of all allied forces in the Second World War, and nuclear exchange would have eternal consequences for the present and the future. Presently, peace is maintained by investing billions of dollars, annually, in weapons that we need to use, but this is the most efficient way of ensuring peace. The ^{author} speaker emphasizes peace as the rational objective for humanity, acknowledging that advocating for peace may lack the drama of war and glory falls on dead eues. Yet, the pursuit of peace remains urgent. Some argue that peace is unattainable without more enlightened attitudes
