

Zainab

369 Batch

Date:

M T W T F S

Your essay would have passed if you had done its fragmentation well.

Economic Imperialism:

You have comprehended the topic very well. However, unfortunately, you have done

Fact or Fiction:

satisfactory fragmentation which has eventually weakened your essay. You have provided only 3 arguments of the asked part.

Work on your segmentation.

* Your language is fine, keep it up.

Besides work on your following Things

* Work on your punctuation

* Don't explain examples

* Build your own analysis first and then validate them via examples.

You have comprehended the topic very well. However,

unfortunately, you have done

Must attend the tutorial session for further suggestions and mistakes.

essay. You have provided only 3

arguments of the asked part.

Work on your segmentation.

Date: _____

M T W T F S

② Economic Imperialism: A modern Reality:

②a Trade Imbalances Reinforcing
Dominance

(2023 EU-ACP Policies restrict African nations, benefiting European exports)

②b Debt dependency as economic leverage.

(IMF's 2024 terms for Argentina
prioritize debt repayment over local needs)

②c Resources Exploitation by multinational cooperation (MNCs)

(2023 mining in Southeast Asia
shows MNCs profit by exploiting local resources)

③ Socioeconomic Consequences for Developing Nations.

③a) Worsening Poverty And Income Inequality.

(The world bank's 2024 report shows foreign profits worsening local inequality in Africa.)

③b) Suppression to local Industry.

(WTO Policies increase Kenya's import reliance, reducing local job creation).

③c) Environmental impact from Foreign Exploitation.

(UN's 2024 report shows long-term environmental harm from foreign mining in Congo).

Date: _____

M T W T F S

⑤ Global Economic Policies Favoring Wealthy Nations:

⑤a Biased Trade Agreements and Standards:

(WTO's 2023 standards favor wealthy Nations, disadvantaging Smaller Economies).

⑤b Restrictive Intellectual Property laws:

(WHO reports show strict IP laws slowed COVID-19 vaccine access in 2023).

⑤c Sovereign Policy Restrictions

(IMF's 2024 terms limit Brazil's economic policy choices, constraining local priorities).

Date: _____

M T W T F S

⑤ Addressing Economic Imperialism: Potential Solutions:

⑤a Reforming International Financial Institutions.

(Argentina's 2024 push for IMF reform underscores the need to reduce restrictive loan conditions for sustainable growth).

⑤b Strengthening local Governance And environmental protections.

(The DRC's 2023 mining regulations show how local laws can curb exploitation and promote resource sovereignty).

⑤c Promoting Fair Trade Agreements and Reducing Dependency.

(The 2023 AfCFTA encourages intra-African trade, reducing dependency on Western markets for economic resilience).

⑥ Conclusion:

"Control the economy, and you control the country" This statement resonates strongly in today's globalized world, where powerful nations increasingly assert dominance over weaker countries through economic means rather than political or military intervention. Economic imperialism - where affluent nations create dependencies that limit the growth and autonomy of developing countries - is defining feature of modern international relations. Through trade imbalances, debt dependency, and resource exploitation, wealthy nations secure their interests while reinforcing a global hierarchy that keeps others reliant. Economic imperialism is not only a reality but also a systemic issue, perpetuating inequality while solutions such as financial reforms, strengthened local governance, and equitable trade policies offer pathways toward self-sufficiency and balanced growth for developing nations.

Wrong use of punctuation

Date: _____

M T W T F S

~~Economic imperialism today is evident in trade policies and financial structures that disadvantage developing countries, maintaining an imbalanced relationship where powerful nations benefit disproportionately. The European Union - African, Caribbean, and Pacific (EU-ACP) trade agreements of 2023 illustrate how trade imbalances sustain economic dominance. By setting terms that restrict African nations' ability to protect local industries, these policies drive dependence on European exports and hinder self-sufficiency. As a result, African countries face systemic disadvantages that prevent their economies from growing independently. Moreover, international loans often bind recipient nations to financial priorities of lenders, diminishing their policy autonomy. In Argentina, the IMF Fund's 2024 restructuring terms emphasised debt repayment over domestic needs, demonstrating how debt dependency effectively curtails economic independence.~~

Your language is good

- By prioritizing creditors' interests, wealthy countries wield financial leverage, reinforcing dependency in borrower nations. MNCs play a significant role in economic imperialism, capitalizing on weak regulatory frameworks in developing nations to exploit local resources.

The 2008 mining operations in Southeast Asia, for example saw MNCs profiting from minimal labor protections and environmental oversight. This exploitation drains resources and undercuts local economies, keeping developing countries locked in a cycle where they provide raw materials without retaining sufficient profits or benefits.

Similarly, the socioeconomic fallout of economic imperialism is severe, with poverty, inequality and environmental degradation prevalent in affected regions, undermining long-term growth. Economic imperialism often exacerbates poverty and income inequality within developing nations. According to the World Bank's 2004 report, the financial dominance of foreign entities worsens local economic disparities, as profits flow out of host countries rather than benefiting their local populations. This pattern leaves vulnerable communities with fewer resources to invest in social programs, education and healthcare.

Date: _____

M T W T F S

Furthermore, policies set by international organisations like the World Trade Organisation (WTO) hinder local industry development in developing countries.

In Kenya, WTO-driven import policies have made it challenging to support domestic industries, driving reliance on foreign goods instead of creating local job opportunities. This industrial suppression limits employment and economic resilience, leaving Kenya dependent on external economies.

Environmental degradation is a significant, often overlooked consequence of economic imperialism.

A 2024 UN report on foreign mining in Congo revealed that inadequate environmental protection have led to long-term ecological harm, affecting local communities. These exploitative practices sacrifice sustainable development for the immediate profits of foreign corporations leaving lasting negative impacts on both environment and well-being of local populations.

International economic policies systematically favor powerful nations, placing smaller economies at a structural disadvantage that sustain their reliance on wealthier counterparts. Global trade agreements frequently favor powerful economies, creating an unfair playing field.

The WTO's 2023 standards, for example, disproportionately benefit wealthier countries by imposing regulations that many smaller economies cannot meet. This imbalance locks developing countries into a subordinate role, unable to compete or benefit fully from global trade. Intellectual property (IP) laws often place essential resources out of reach for poorer countries.

During COVID-19 pandemic, WHO findings in 2023 showed that strict IP restrictions on vaccines delayed access for many developing nations, slowing their recovery.

Date: _____

M T W T F S

Date: _____

and exposing them to prolonged economic risks. These IP barriers serve as tools of economic imperialism, maintaining dominance by controlling knowledge and technology.

Loan conditions ^{also} imposed by financial institutions like the IMF often limit a country's policy choices, constraining its ability to prioritize local needs.

The IMF's 2024 terms for Brazil, for instance, limited its ability to implement independent economic policies, illustrating how such restrictions undermine sovereignty. By shaping economic policies to align with the interests of creditors, these conditions prioritize external control over local growth.

So mitigating the impacts of economic imperialism requires reforms that empower developing nations and ensure a fairer, more sustainable global economy. Such as. Advocates for reform, such as Argentina in 2024 call for the IMF and similar bodies to reduce restrictive loan conditions that prioritize

ce. creditor interests. By offering terms that support domestic prioritize and sustainable growth, reformed financial institutions could help reduce dependency, fostering economic self-reliance in developing nations. Countries like the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) have begun strengthening local governance by implementing stricter regulations on mining activities in 2023.

These laws help to prevent resource exploitation and protect environmental sustainability, empowering nations to manage resources independently and secure greater benefits for their economies.

Fair trade initiatives, such as African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) launched in 2023, promote regional cooperation and trade with Africa. By reducing dependency on western markets, such initiatives allow developing nations to cultivate resilient economies, break away from unequal trade dynamics, and foster sustainable economic growth.

Date: _____

(M) (T) (W) (T) (F) (S)

In conclusion, economic imperialism stands as formidable barrier to the autonomy and growth of developing nations, perpetuating a cycle of dependency that undermines their potential. The imbalances created by trade agreements, debt conditions, and resource exploitation not only maintain the dominance of wealthy nations but also exacerbate poverty, inequality, and environmental degradation in global south. Addressing these challenges require a concerted effort to reform financial structures, strengthen local governance, and promote equitable trade practices. As we confront these issues, we must remember the words of renowned economist Joseph Stiglitz "Globalization has failed to deliver on its promises of prosperity for all" It is imperative that we reimagine a global economy that prioritizes fairness and sustainability, empowering all nations to thrive independently and collaboratively. Only through such

Date: _____

M T W T F S

changes ^{we} can hope to dismantle
the structures of economic
imperialism and pave the way
for a more just and equitable
world.