(iii)

Forecasting the weather means the struggle to find out what it will be in the coming days. It is a complex process which involves many different things that affect the weather. To make a fairly accurate forecast, all these factors are to be studied very carefully.

2

Hence, weather forecasting is a science, and it's called weather science or meteorology.

(iv)

Forecasting the weather is not an easy task altogether. There are many factors that cast their effects on weather. To study the weather correctly, all these factors are to be examined carefully and in detail. As it involves the empirical method and the science, it is a difficult and complex process.
