

Your language is fine to some extent.

Your topic comprehension is also fine.

Outline.

Your would have passed if you hadn't made some mistakes.

Thesis statement:-

* Rephrase some of your points.

Don't mention them in your thesis

* Instead of your expressions

* Work on your sentence structure a little bit.

* Spelling mistakes

* Work on your punctuation

* Try to build your own analysis not provide information. From a feminist to challenging stereotypes

* Don't provide examples information etc in your introduction

* Try to hit the topic

Not the asked part, don't write it

b- Miriam Hammon a pioneer of women sports

- in long jumping

Must attend the tutorial session for further

suggestions and flaws

(Babe Didrikson Zaharias, Jackie Joyner)

(4)

Challenges for women recognition in Sports.

- a- Patriarchal and misogynistic mindset have become barriers in women's struggle.
- b. lack of proper facilities in School and Colleges.
- c- absence of sponsorship programmes (Women's Sports funding foundation)

Rephrase it

d- Void of women leadership in Sports (Women sports foundation report)

e- Inadequate media coverage (media centre report)

f- Sexualizing and objectifying women (Women in Sports)

These two points are not aligned with the topic

g. Health and Safety concerns gets overlooked.

(5)

Way forward in increasing women participation in Sports.

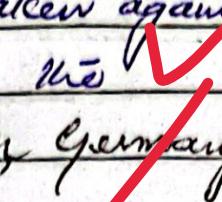

a- Community engagement and government commitment can paved the way for women (New Zealand, Brazil)

b-

Inadequate media coverage.

c- Strict actions need to be taken against objectifying and harassing the women. (Canada, Germany)

d- Increasing women leaderships in sports
(India, Japan, France)

e)

Conclusion.

I think the biggest struggle is just being taken seriously. I believe women can do anything that men can do." This quote from Billie Jean King highlights how women are capable of doing anything, but treating women as a lesser being creates challenges for their recognition. Women have proven themselves as being the pioneers of sports from Billie Jean King to Minn. Hamm. Women have broken the stereotypes and encourage women to strive. Nevertheless, even today, women are struggling for their acknowledgement in sports. The challenges that often hinders women growth includes, patriarchal culture and norms that are entitled to confine women in homes alone. Along with it, women in sports receive a few. One is no sponsorship with less media coverage as compared to their male counterparts, and BIPAs are prime examples of it. Also, misogynistic mindset of the society views women from the lens of pleasure and some which entitled them to objectifying and harassing the women in every sphere of life be it sports or top tier positions. However, these challenges can be addressed by engaging and guiding communities. With government firm commitment to

Avoid such expressions

Change expressions

Dont provide information or data in your introduction

DAY

enactment on laws and increasing women's participation in leadership by taking actions against harassment! Also providing adequate coverage and acknowledging the women in sports. Great women like Billie Jean King and Serena Williams have pioneered advancements in sports. Yet women of today continue to face challenges in gaining recognition from battling stereotypes to limited professional leagues. However, with firm commitment and practical steps women can reshape the dynamics of sports.

Women have to face

False topic statement

The challenges in every walk of life, from personal to professional and sports is one of untouchable field where women are considered as a taboo. In 1940's and 60's women have proven themselves that they can do everything as their male counterparts.

Nevertheless, women of today still treated as this is not where women belong to.

In the world where women have right to vote, to life and property, choosing a career is still have limited scope for women. Additionally, women sports are considered as less exciting or competitive that result in less media coverage and underdevelopment. The lack of visibility not only affects athlete's career but also diminishes the opportunity for young girls to aspire in sports. Through concerted efforts in media representation and grass root support will change the dynamics of sports for women.

Today history is filling with women who have fought against the odds and paved the ways for future generation in sports. One of them is Billie Jean King, a tennis legend and advocate for gender equality, she won 39 Grand Slam titles and was instrumental in the fight for equal pay in sports. She has been the America's number one tennis player and strong advocate of women's participation in sports. Together with it, Serena Williams or anyone equal and introduce them have aspire the young girls that no career is men centric. She has won 23 Grand Slam titles and one of the greatest player who has broke the records by setting the new ones. She was also the strong women rights advocate like BJK. Hence, women with focus see no boundary in paving the ways for future generation.

Along with Billie Jean King and Serena Williams, Mia Hamm is one of the greatest female soccer players in history. She joined the Women's National Team at age of fifteen and become one of the top scorers, with 158 goals in 276 caps. Hamm was instrumental in the United States victory at the 1999 FIFA women's world cup. Beyond her athletic achievements, she advocates for gender equality in sports. Through the Mia Hamm Foundation, promoting opportunities for young women and raising awareness for women's health. Hamm's legacy includes inspiring women and advancing recognition for women in sports.

Women in sports not only inspire the new generation but also open the avenues for women that there is nothing that can ~~hold~~ women's potential. One of them is Babe Didrikson Zaharias, a multi-sport athlete who excelled in track and field, basketball and golf. She is often regarded as one of the greatest athletes of all the time. Also, the other athlete who is pioneer of long jumping: Jackie Joyner-Kersee. She is an Olympic heptathlete and considered one of the finest athlete in long jumping, as long jumping is often regarded as the sport for men. She has paved the history by winning three gold medals and one silver across four Olympic games. Thus, women is treated equal as men and there is nothing that can stop them from touching heights.

Your actual essay starts from here. Try to hit the topic directly.

Incomplete sentence

Despite women

have achieved a lot in every field of life especially sports. women still has to ~~struggle for making the world to like~~
~~their existence. Sports is considered a career~~
~~opportunity and made for men. the patriarchal~~ ~~culture and misogynistic mindset considers~~ ~~women as a lesser being. Misogyny~~
~~often perpetuates stereotypes that women~~
~~are less capable or less competitive~~
~~than men in sports. Also, in some cultures,~~
~~traditional gender roles dictates that~~ ~~women should prioritize family and~~ ~~domestic responsibilities over career. This~~
~~societal pressures and culture limit women~~
~~participation in sports. According to Global~~ ~~gender report by the World Economic Forum~~
~~Only 25-30% of total professional~~
~~sport participation of women. This clearly~~
~~illustrates how rigid practices and beliefs~~
~~lead to the underrepresentation of women in~~ ~~sports.~~

+ to
In additional<sup>1</sup> patriarchal culture and misogynistic mindset that hinders women's representation in sports the lack of sponsorship of women has further exacerbated the situation. The United States women soccer team, despite

Don't provide information. Build your own analysis

DAY

DATE

Then success and popularity, often struggled to seek sponsorship at levels impossible to aspire at. Thus, failing their earning and recognition. Women have to face family and professional barriers to often make their place on every field. According to women sports funding foundation shows that only 4% of all sports sponsorship dollars are allocated to women's sports. While that women athletes only receive 0.4% of all endorsement deals in sports. This stark contrast underscores the significant gap in financial support.

Further more with absence of adequate sponsorship, there is a void in women leadership in sports. Leadership is important to aspire, guide and voice the concerns of its athletes. However, there is a huge gap in women representation in leadership positions. Only a handful of women serve as head coaches in international leagues. The report published by sports and gender equality in sports represents women hold only 5% of executive roles and only 17% account for board membership. Hence, today women fail in leadership position in sport that can guide and support women.

Your own analysis is missing

Together with, lack of women leadership in sports, inadequate media coverage of women's sports significantly hampers the visibility and recognition of women athletes. Studies show that women sports receive only 5-10% of overall media coverage, which contrast sharply with extensive attention given to men's events.

The women sports foundation report consistently highlight the gender gap in media coverage. It shows women athletes receive only 4% of media coverage, when female athletes rarely featured in media their achievement go unnoticed and potential role for young girls are sidelined.

Besides the impartial media coverage for women athletes, women often gets objectified and sexualized in sports that undermine their achievements. Media coverage often emphasizes appearance over athletic performance, portraying women as objects rather than competitors. This narrative often view women as images of looks rather than her skills and achievements. For instance, sports advertisements frequently use sexualized imagery of women to attract viewers, reinforcing the stereotype that their value lies in their physical appearance rather than their athletic abilities. Serena Williams had face social media harassment due to her attire. Hence, objectifying and sexualize women have only known the women's existence and achievements.

Increasing women struggle in participating and acknowledging women with objectifying the women. The lack of proper facilities are some of the challenges. The lack of facilities for women in sports is a significant barrier to participation and development. Many sports programs, especially at the youth and amateur level, often prioritize funding and resources for male athletes, resulting in inadequate training facilities for women. This disparity can be seen in schools, colleges and community centres where girls have less access to quality fields, gyms and practice spaces. The lack of investment not only hinders performance but also discourage girls from pursuing sports, increasing gender inequalities.

Lastly, health is a prime factor in excelling sports and achieving milestones. However, women in sports lack basic health and safety that prevent them in pursuing sports. Health and safety concerns for women in sports are critical issues that often receive insufficient attention. Female athletes may face unique injuries due to their anatomy and physiology, such as higher rates of knee injuries and hormonal fluctuations. Additionally, inadequate attention to mental health, nutrition and access to proper medical care further compromise their well-being. According to a report by the Women's Sports Foundation, 40% female athletes experience depression, anxiety, and absence mindedness which impairs their performance and achievement in tournaments.

~~One thing every problem has a solution and in women participation in sports is no exception. Community engagement through women and government support by increasing women facilities and promoting women can paved the way for future generation. Community engagement is necessary in uplifting the misseries of women. Programmes that promote female involvement and encourage participation can empower girls. Programmes like Girls on the Run, the common running, team work and healthy living for women. Government of New Zealand has launched~~

Women and Girls Sports Strategy that focus on enhancing female participation through targeted programmes of funding, creating facilities to encourage women participation in sports. Also, in Brazil the programme named 'Moç Brasil program' has launched to engage women in sports along with their children to create a supportive community for women. Thus, these initiatives have increased women participation in sports by making them the part of community.

Aside from engaging communities and government to increase women's participation, proper media coverage is also one of the significant aspect in promoting women. Media outlets can highlight the success stories of athletes like Simone Biles, Mir Hamza, and Sevra Williams can draw attention and interest of the audience. Also engaging social media campaigns in leveraging social media platform to promote women's events and share encouraging events of them will boost visibility and acknowledgement. Lastly, media coverage can be enhance by promoting women's events along side men's can features women competitiveness and can ensure both genders receive equal promotion and representation. Hence, media coverage play an important part in increasing visibility.

and equality.

Along with boosting visibility by adequate media coverage, strict actions against the harassment and objectifying the women in sports is essential to create a safe and equitable environment. Implementing robust policies that explicitly prohibit harassment and objectification with clear consequences for the violators, sends a strong message that such behavior will not be tolerated. One of the prime examples of Canada that has impressive legislation addressing harassment in sports called Sport Canada policy on harassment and abuse, which outlines strict policies and guidelines procedure for reporting. Wish that South Africa is taking initiatives in increasing women participation by strict laws on harassment and objectifying women.

Apart from implementing strict policies against harassment, there is a dire need of increasing women in leadership and executive role in sports. Increasing women's leadership roles in sports is vital for promoting equity and equality. Policies prioritizing gender diversity on boards and in executive positions can ensure women's voices and concerns are included in decision making.

Countries like India encourage women representation as around 15-20% of leadership positions in sports organizations are held by women. Also women like Cynthia Marshall, CEO of the Dallas Mavericks, the first black woman to lead an NBA team, focusing on inclusivity and equality. And Janet Evans, a former Olympic swimmer currently the Chief Strategy officer for the LA 2028 Olympic Games, she has been a true advocate for women athlete representation. Hence, women in top tier position are crucial for the growth and stability in the world.

To conclude, women in sports have to face challenges and struggle. Nevertheless, history is filled with women like Billie Jean King and Jackie Joyner. Who are not the athlete to be remembered to be strong advocate for women representation and rights in sports. Although, women still have to face the struggle in the realm of support from misogynistic society to being objective as a source of pleasure and home makers. Despite of it, if women decided to pursue their career in sports, she lacks basic facilities from spaces, to gym, and women trainers. Which further prevent the women in pursuing their careers as sports women. Women have always treated as less competitive.

DAY _____

DATE _____

Capable than men. No matter how far have women come, women still has to struggle in realizing their existence, achievements and acknowledgement. After all no problem is alien to humans and making women the part of sports in no exception. Through engaging communities and launching programmes for empowering women by providing them safe and secure environment will clear the way for women visibility and recognition. The world will be beautiful if all the genders equally support each other and in every sphere of life. Ensuring women representation by discarding all rigid and outdated practices will reshape the dynamics of sport for women.