Recently, a controversy arose at a book fair in Lahore, instead of focusing on books and other literary activities, there were various stalls selling food and other items, which stagnated the fair's real purpose. Many participants were really upset and said that the book fair <sup>had become</sup> a food market, with little space and attention given to books, authors, and literary discussions. <sup>This pronounced emphasis</sup> due to focus on food stalls at the fair, a debate was started about whether this event was fulfilling its literary purpose or only focusing on commercial interests.
