Peace as a Practical Goal

Full or total

All-out war has no means as nuclear powers possess numbers of nuclear warheads where a single warhead has the capability of damage equal to more than any war in the history ten times done by Allied forces in WW2. Nuclear radiation will spread across the world threatening civilization and posterity. Today, countries spend a significant budget on idle weapons to create deterrence which is surely not the only solution for peace. Peace should be the first choice but the demands of the peacemakers are often ignored.

Moreover, International law is useless until the policy-makers of nuclear head countries leave their antagonism aside, which people can help them.

One who hates war and desires peace must re-examine their behaviour to find peaceful solutions. Many think it is impossible, making it
