Conclusion:

Your outline is fine. Rephrase some of your points.

In 2024, when Aashad Nadeem won a gold medal in :

Olympics by throwing Javelin at 92.97 meters, Aashad Nadeem got a significant media hype and got prizes and sponsorships. On the contrast, when any women get medal in International games, they do not get such type of hype and attention like this - whose fault is this? Sports is that type of game that exists in every country and it has very important role in giving one the recognition besides from any language, belief, cultural or societal differences but it often results bad when it comes to women sports. Women sports is under-recognised because they have no proper facilities.

of grounds and training academies. Similarly, inefficient funding by government for sports also plays a role in less recognition of women sports. Furthermore, cultural and societal barriers hinders women's progress in sports.

Moreover, biased media representation for women is a major factor that women sports struggle for recognition. In addition to, lack of sponsorships and inequality in pay as compared to men sports cutes women not to engage in sports as it does not have good earning opportunity.

Work on your punctuation

These hurdles are a major set-back for women sports but these can be addressed by breaking cultural and societal barriers through awareness campaigns. Furthermore, there is a need of making consistent policies to empower women sports. Moreover, by ensuring equal pay for women as compared to men in sports can play a crucial role in empowering ~~women and promotes women sports on a global level. Women sports struggle for recognition due to inefficient funding, no proper training academies, and biased media representation which can be addressed by taking effective measures, so that women can get the support and recognition they deserve.~~

To begin with, no proper facilities are available of grounds and training academies. Grounds and training academies are much needed to enhance any sports, particularly women sports. Women often face challenges in access to training academies and proper playing grounds for men. For example, In Pakistan, there are many training academies like Muhammed Wasim Cricket academy but and Diamond and Pearl Cricket club but these academies are men focused as the players of these academies get a chance to play internationally, due to less training institutes for women sports, they do not get a chance to play internationally. Thus, non-availability of people training academies and grounds, women's progress in sports is hampered.

Besides this, inefficient funding by The government for women sports is also a factor behind women sports less recognition. In many countries, developed and developing, governments often invest in educational and health sectors but they lack investment in sports, particularly women sports. Fund provided by government can be utilized by nurturing talents, providing women playgrounds, giving them transport facilities but all these are problems which can only be solved by governments give more its attention towards women sports. Hence, inefficient funding by government for women sports is a factor behind women's sport less recognition.

Furthermore, cultural and societal barriers hinder women's progress in sports. In some countries of South Asia like Pakistan, India, Bangladesh and Afghanistan, women playing sports is considered as social taboos as compared to western countries. These countries often <sup>provide</sup> restricted environment for women to play sports. In Feudalism culture, women are being considered

You have to substantiate your argument with authentic evidence.

As slaves of men and they can not do what they really want to. These types of barriers often restrict women to pursue careers in sports. So, cultural and societal barriers hinder women's progress in sports.

Similarly, Inequality in pay of women as compared to men is a set-back to women sports. Women, in most cases, are considered weak and fragile. Despite, having talent and skills as that of men, ~~women are paid less as women's sport is less recognised~~, so hiring teams give them as much pay as they want and women often need economic support to earn bread and butter and they give them this assent in such less pay and no one hears the voice of these undispaid athletes.

• Don't start sentences from but so because Also

So, mostly women get stuck in this undispaid circle and do not get a chance to earn a good income. Hence, inequality in pay of women as compared to men is a major set-back to women sports.

Moreover, lack of sponsorships restricts women's sport more recognition. Sponsorships are provided by companies to get their product featured

By one and ultimately goal to get higher sales.

Sponsorships are provided by companies to those people who have good image and reputation. For example, Arshad Nadeem when won a <sup>silver</sup> medal in 2015, he got one sponsorship but when he got success in 2024, millions of cash prizes and dozens

~~This evidence can't be given here~~

~~because media sponsorship is~~

~~also given to women as well.~~

~~Therefore, come up with other examples.~~

~~as currently women are suppressed due to non-availability~~

~~of facilities, they also do not get sponsorships. Hence,~~

~~lack of sponsorships ~~restricts~~ women's sport <sup>to be</sup> more~~

~~recognised.~~

~~Showing bias or providing suggestions?~~

~~Another, biased media representation for~~

~~women is hindering getting women sports recognition.~~

~~Media needs to give importance equal as media give~~

~~to men sports and due to media, particularly social~~

~~media, many sports stars get hype and recognition~~

~~for their achievement but biased media is very dangerous~~

~~as it only tells the one side of the coin. For instance, a~~

~~sport indicates that on media less than 10% women~~

~~representation is shown, highlighting women do not get a~~

~~chance to speak about their sports and encourage more women~~

Your arguments are persistently sustainably low.

women to pursue career in sports. Thus, biased media representation is hindering women sports getting recognised.

Moreover, lack of development programs for women <sup>sports</sup> is also a cause behind low recognition of women sports. Development programs are necessary to promote sports in a country and to encourage youth to take part in sports, particularly women. Less development programs results in difficulties for women to polish out the skills and represent the country national and internationally. Development programs play a key role in hunting new talent and providing a landscape to bring out their talent. Therefore, lack of development programs for women sports is also a cause behind low recognition of women sports.

In the similar way, little or less rewards for women in sports is a contributing factor towards that women sport is less recognised. Rewards are given on the achievement of something winning nationally or internationally. It can be of cash prizes, medals or an honorary certificate but in case of women sports there are no rewards for them in the domestic level which urge them not to pursue career in sports and ultimately less recognition for women sports if there are not enough women representing it. Rewards motivates the person, boosts morale and give a sense of something achieved but little or less rewards discourage women from playing sports. Hence, little or less rewards is also a contributing factor towards that women sports is less recognised.

Last but not the least, absence of domestic league competitions for women hinders women's recognition in sports. Domestic competition encourages one to take part and ultimately get a chance to play for its country in any sports, particularly women. There are less or no domestic league competitions among women sports. For example, events like Paris games, Olympics held internationally. The format of these games in a small budget on domestic level is necessary to promote women sports and they can take part in any game in which they have experience or skills. Hence, absence of domestic league competitions for women hinders women's recognition in sports.

There are many hurdles like inefficient funding, lack of sponsorships, and little or less awards for women in sports but these can be curb by breaking cultural and societal barriers through primarily awareness. By increasing funding for sports and ensuring equality in pay as well as others can play a big role in addressing the problems women sports recognition is facing.

To begin with, breaking cultural and societal barriers will lead to recognition of women sports.

Cultural and societal barriers like women cannot play sports, women do not have this free will, women cannot get what she likes are socially created and has no link with reality. It is the right of women to get equal respect and get equal opportunities as of men. Promoting awareness through educational campaigns and through social media, highlighting the significance of sports and its potential benefits. This will help to change societal attitude towards women sports and women will able to play sports and ultimately shrink the women games. Thus, breaking cultural and societal barriers will lead to recognition of women sports.

Besides this making consistent policies for sport events will empower women. Many countries often develop economic, political policies but they do not discuss about women sports for long term. They do not think or formulate policies that will improve women sports.

Formulation and implementation of sports policies, particularly women sports, are needed to give them a view of sports in a long-term in a country and make policies to conduct events internationally or host international events that will promote sports and ultimately women sports get recognition.

Furthermore, increasing funding for sports will play a key role in getting women sports recognition all over the world. Governments can spend on making playgrounds, hosting events, providing resources to women teams, giving them transport facilities will encourage younger youth as it has many privileges. Some countries might also start <sup>to</sup> spending women sports as competitor countries are doing it. This will give a hope to under-privileged sports of women to get shine and to be recognised all over the world. Governments can also spend on advertising young talent for media through recognition to women sports can be achieved.

Moreover, present unbiased media representation to promote women sports. Media, print and social media, plays a crucial role in changing thinking about any topic. Positively media be utilized to present the good image, potential benefits, income opportunities and achievements of women in contributing to sports.

This will help to remove social and cultural barriers for women and women taking part in sport be recognised.

Similarly, many women would be encouraged to be a part of sports team. Thus, presenting unbiased media representation to women sports is crucial to promote sports.

In conclusion, due to inefficient funding, non-availability of training academies, and biased media factors, women's sports struggle to be recognised while by taking certain effective measures these hurdles can be addressed, so they get the support, respect, and recognition they deserve.

Women sports struggle for recognition due to lack of development programs and little or less awards for women's sports.

Similarly, absence of domestic large competitions is also a factor behind women sports struggle for recognition. Thus hurdles requires a multi-faceted approach including ensuring equality in pay, increasing funding for women sports, and breaking cultural and societal barriers through awareness. The world is now paying attention to women sports and is recognising day by day.

Political will and participation from citizens is needed <sup>my</sup> to promote women sports.
