Title = Prioritizing Work First and Money Second

It is incredibly difficult for a man of good education, bravery, and intellect to designate money to be the forefront of his thoughts. For example, a soldier of good training aims to perform well, and, while he is grateful to receive a pay, his primary aim is to achieve victory in battle. Likewise, clergymen and doctors also appreciate their pay, yet it is not the driving force behind why they do what they do. This pattern is the same for all men of bravery and good training - their pay is important, yet always secondary to ~~their~~ their vocation.
