Title : Mission Over Money : The True Aim of the Professional

The author says that a professional man never prioritizes money over mission. He likes making money, but enjoys his work. A soldier's desire is to fight well and win battle. The clergyman's goal is to baptize and preach. The doctor's objective is to cure the sick. All of these professional people get monetary reward for their job. The author says that passionate men, without a doubt, value the virtue of service over salary.
