It is impossible for an educated, intellectual, or brave person to prioritize making money just as it is unreasonable to make sinners the main focus of life. While healthy people enjoy their meals, it is not their life's purpose. Similarly, healthy minded individuals should enjoy making money, but their primary aim should be something greater. A good soldier seeks to fight well, not just to be paid. Likewise, clergymen and doctors prioritize their duties over their compensation. For brave and well-trained individuals, work and duty come first, with compensation being important but secondary.
