'Purpose Over Profit'

In life, for well-educated and brave individuals, making money should not be the primary objective. Just as people enjoy their meals without making them central focus of their existence, similarly, people should value earning money without it becoming their life's purpose. A good soldier, for example, fights to win battles, not merely for financial reward. Doctors prioritize curing patients over fees. Similarly, clergymen preach and baptize for spiritual reasons, not merely for financial reward. For all brave and well-trained professionals, their duty comes first, and their compensation remains secondary.
